

G. J. GOULD DEFENSE QUOTES HIS FATHER

Letters Urge Son "to Take All Responsibility on Spot in Everything"

DOCUMENTS FILED IN COURT

New York, May 10.—In defending himself from the attack of Frank J. Gould, his brother, George J. Gould quotes letters that passed between himself and his father, Jay Gould, founder of the fortune. The letters are on file in the Supreme Court, where Frank Gould and his sister, Anna, the Duchess de Talleyrand, are seeking to have George removed as a trustee of the estate upon the ground of alleged mismanagement.

In March, 1892, the year he died, Jay Gould wrote his son George:

"My dear son—Do not work hard. Take plenty of outdoor exercise and plenty of air. I dare not think what would happen if anything went wrong with you. So, my dear boy, for my sake comply with the foregoing."

Jay Gould wrote his son again on May 13, 1880:

"My dear son—What you do will never be questioned. I have always tried to impress upon you to take all responsibility upon the spot in everything."

Ambitions of George Gould to build a transcontinental system are characterized by the Duchess's counsel as grandiose, with hazardous possibilities, leaning in the direction of disaster, not only to himself, but also the fortune left by Jay Gould.

Reasons which actuate the Duchess de Talleyrand in supporting Frank's petition are explained by George, who says: "My sister, Anna, has long been unfriendly toward me."

He explains this alleged unfriendliness as due partly to his opposing her second marriage.

While Mr. Gould asserts his brother Frank shows malice in seeking to oust him, the latter's counsel refutes the charge and says of letters written by Mrs. Helen Gould Stuyvesant that they are irrelevant to the present controversy. Further, the lawyer declared Mr. Gould is mistaken when he denies knowledge of Frank's second marriage until long after the ceremony, asserting he became cognizant of the union through releases of dower by Mrs. Edith Gould, wife of Frank, which were filed at that time.

But that is hardly enough for the retail merchants and the luxury tax collectors.

A girl may be sixty if she is tiny.

If she is big at fifteen, she may be a woman. That is the expert opinion of the women's clothing merchant. They answer the question from the clothes they sell.

There are dresses for women and dresses for misses and then dresses for girls.

The tax on luxuries is on women's and misses' apparel. Girls' clothes are not included. So it is important to have the girl question solved. There is no age limit for girls, only size, and retailers dare not issue a statement on what size puts a woman out of the girl class. The "dear old girl" of the language of summer park benches would rise to haunt them.

You may be a Miss or even a Mrs. in the social register or on the factory payroll, but after all it's the figure that makes you a girl. And it is with figures that the luxury tax seems mostly concerned.
